Mrs. Brierly caught up the letter from the floor, to which it had tailen.

Eddy took up the second letter, opened and read it aloud, while upon his countenance slowiy gathered an expression of horror.

The second letter was from Hart Burgovne:

"Inventor, June 12, 1851.

"MASTER EDWARD BUINS: As you will understand, by the letter written by your mether the other day, Mrs. Julia Burns is now my wife. We were married on the morning of the 10th.

"I summoned Dr. Builet, and he, with other physicians, pronounced her dangerously insane. No one was with her in my absence. The cause of the attack is supposed to be excitement, brought on by finding hersell in the same rooms where she had spent the first years of her first marriage. By medical advice, I caused poor Julia to be removed to Dr. Builet's private retrent for the insane, where she now is, under the Doctor's wise and skillful treatment. Her recovery is more than 60ubtful.

"I advise you to remain at Poughkeepsie until your school vacation, when you will come to my house, which is to be your future home. You have my sympathy in this affliction. Truly yours.

"The letter fell from Edd, 's nerveless hands. There were no tears now, but instead a look of stern resolve, kirs. Brirly was startled as she encountered his burning glance.

"Insane on her bridal day!" exclaimed the good woman. "What an awful blow for you, my poor boy!"

"I told you to remain at Poughkeepsie till your school term closed," becau Mr. Burgoyne irritably, "I know you did, sir," returned Eddy, respectfuily. "But my mother is in trouble."

"Sit down, boy. I can see that the news has been a shock to yon," said Mr. Burgoyne, in a mere affable tone. "You cannot imagine how I have suffered!"

E ldy's heart softened toward him. "Is mother really so bad off, sir, in you stated in your letter?" he asked, in a faitering voice.

"Pad off, my poor Eddy! She is raymy mad."

E 'dy shivered.
"Pon.'t you know what made her crazy?" he asked.

"No. I wish I did. We were married in the morning, and she came home with n.e. We walked together, spending the day very pleasantly on the vermonas. In the evening I was called out on business. Julia went into the library. The house keeper says that no one called during my absence, and that Julia saw no one. Yet when I came, an hour leter, my whic flew at the like a wild-cat. "Mother is at the private mad house?" asked Eddy, after a pause.

"Yes, I had to send her there."

"I suppose I can see her?" asked Eddy.

"Well, come back siter you have seen her," said Mr. Burnoyne. "But besure to be back by six, our support time."

E: |y took his leave.
"There is some mystery in all this," he whispered. "Some dreadful mystery. And I must know what it is! Now for Dr. Buliet's!"

About a mile from the village of Riverton, upon what it is! Now for Dr. Bulict's!"

About a mile from the village of Riverton, upon a lonely country road, stood Dr. Bulict's private asylum for the insane.

The grounds were separated from the road by a high stone-wail. The house—square, three stories in height, built of red brick, and lighted within by marrow, grated windows—was some distance from the road, in the midst of a small pine grove, which screened the asylum from the curious giances of casual passers by.

The double iron gates were open upon this bright June siternoon, and Evily passed unchallenged into the grounds, and, with a sinking heart, he ascended the steps of the high porch and rang the door-bell loudly.

Presently the bolts securing the door upos the inner side were withdrawn, and a coarse looking reliow, one of the keepers of the institution evidently, presented himself.

Well, what's wanted?" demanded this person roughly.

"I wish to see Dr. Bullet," replied Eddy.

"To see Dr. Bullet, en?" The doctor's busy; he's got no time to waste on boys."

The keeter made a movement to slut the door in Eddy's lace. As quick as a flash the boy slipped across the threshold and into the hait.

"Tell Dr. Bullet I desire to see him," he said coolly. "I shall stay here antil I do see him. You can give him my name—Edward Burns."

"Burns, en? Well, I'll tell the doctor. Seeing you're inside, you can step into the reception toom."

lie closed, boiled, and barred the outer door, an isulicin, ushered Eddy into a small, dreary waiting room at one side of the hall. He then hurried away in quest of the doctor.

Nearly half an hour elapsed before any one appeared. Now and then a muffled shriek or long-drawn moan reached his ears.

Unable to bear longer the suspense of waiting, he touched a bell rull and rang a loud peal, the jaugle of which re ched even his ears.

The noise had scarcely died away when a pompous portly personage entered the waiting-room.

Eddy recognized him at first glauce as Dr. Bullet.

The noise had scarcely died away when a pompone, portily personage entered the waiting-room.

Rady recognized bim at first glance as Dr. Bullet. He was a hard-faced man, past middle nice, with keen eyes, a low torchead, a cleanly shaven mee, remered peculiarly unpleasant by a sanctimonious expression which contrasted strangely with his shaister features. The Doctor had formetiv keet a private insune asylum in New Jersey, but he had full-nito an ill-repute, and it having been proved against him that same people had been incarrectated in his gloomy cells, he had been obliged to abaudon that fleid of cuterations, and had restablished his asylum at Riverton on the Hidson. He had now teen at Riverton some years, and was regarded in the village as an utrieft and honorable man, having, it seemed, left his former reputation behind him when he changed his residence.

"Ah, Endy fluces!" exclaimed the Doctor, in his onid, bland vace, extensive his hund. "How do you do, Eldyr. How you grow! Glad to see you, my fine fellow."

But Eddy did not seem to see the outsiretched hand. He certainly did not older to take it. There was a frown on his brows, and his live were set to.

But Eddy did not seem to see the outstretched hand. He certainly did not offer to take it. There was a frown on his brows, and his lips were set together in an expression which would nave rendered the santing Doctor uneasy had be seen it upon an older face. "I have heard from Mr. Burgoyne that my mother i here," said the boy camby. "I have come to see ner, Dr. Builet."

The expression on the Doctor's face changed to one of innersiness. Which, swilly as it passed, was not unnoticed by Eddy.

"Yes, ah, yes," said the Doctor smoothly. "You nave come to see you mother? Very landable—very. I am sorry though, Master Burus, that I must remes your request. Sire, Burgoyne is in a critical state. The least excitement, such as the slight of you might occasion her, might occasion her, wight to you might occasion her, might occasion her, wight of you might occasion her, might occasion her, wight occasion her, wight occasion when might occasion her, wight occasion, which we have a cond or memory, and I should not dare to risk it. Ah, the is a terrible affliction to Mrs. Burgoyne's friends, might will be a condition of the world excite my mother, if she were come me?"

"Think? I know it. She might tear you to pieces!"

"I cannot think so, Doctor," declared Eddy.

would excite my mother, if she were ... so me?

"Think? I know it. She might tear you to pieces!"

"I cannot think so, Doc'or," declared Eddy.
"Even in her matness, she would not learn me."

"My judgment must decide the matter, Master Burne," said the Doctor stifts.

"I beg your pardon, Doctor," said Eddy, humbly enough; "but I beg you to let me loos is upon nor through the grating at her door. I won't speak a word. Only let me see her once more."

"It is impossible, shaster Barns—"

"Oh, don't say that I' cried Eddy. "I am all se has in the wide world, Doctor—"

"She has her husband!"
Eddy unde a gesture of despair.

"She don't love him as she loves me," he said. You don't know how she loves me, sir. She has worked hard to keep me at a not since father died; she married Mr. Burgoyne because she thought he would be a father to me. My acart is breaking to see her!"

"You rotuse, then?" cried the boy, "I fell you I must see her! My (ather left her in my care. I am her projector—"

"Mr. Burgoyne," said the Doctor, "is her guardian now, and the only one I can recognize. Go home to your step father. Your mother is in good hands, and you can do no good is hanging about and acting in this highly improperstyle."

Eddy felt insuited, but he could not abandon his project without a last ender yor to effect it.

"I am only a boy, Doctor Ballet," he said, "but I know that there must be some one in the land more powerful than you, who can rermit me to see my mother. I will see a lawyer—"

"That is big talk for a boy of your size!" enered the Doctor. "Your mother was committed to my asylum in accordance with the law made and provided for such cases. Any lawyer will tell you that no one can give you a permit to see a mad woman, when her physi. In declares she must be seeluged!"

Eddy felt the "pelessness of his case. He had no powerful timed—no money. And he felt sure that Mr. Bu coyne and Dr. Builot were his enemies, and that seme terrible mystery was connected with his mother. mother. "I am only a boy, Doctor," said Eddy at last, sor-sow ally, but with a brave look shining in its eyes, "but I have a man's courage. You may hear from me again."

me again."

He bowed gravely and went out,
With a heavy heart he moved down the gravelled walk to the gate.

He was determined not to abandon his mother, let her madness be as dangerous as it might; but how could be compass his object?

He had nearly reached the iron gates, and was moving with a loitering step, when he looked back at the grim asyium. No one was looking out at nim.

It was now about six o'clock of the long summer afternoon.

How the twilight lingered! Eddy, peering out, saw one of the keepers lock the great iron gates at an early hour, but the old town clock at Riverton had struck the bour of ten before the lights and the noises died out of the asylum.

It was nearly eleven o'clock when Eddy, cramped and tired, creat out from his concealment.

Be moved slowly around the building sgain and again, scanning the upper windows. No light cleared from them, no scand of life, save now and then a moan came from within those dreary cells.

and then a moun came from within those dreary tells.

"Can it be she is not un there?" thought the boy, a cold sweat starting to his brow. "Can they have put her into a dungeon?"

Around and around the building he slowly circled, a wild prayer in his heart that if his mother were in one of the upper rooms, some providential impulse might lead her to look out.

His prayer was unswered. He who answers prayer directed her restless steps to her grated window. A stender figure sud-leadly appeared, a pair of hands were classed upon the window ledge, and a pale late, hall hidden by a mass of flosting halr, was pressed against the iron bars, looking upward at the glowing, abrils sky.

Eddy recognized Hart Burgoyne, and made his The vision lingured but a moment at the window, then withdrawing itself. At its disappearance, Eddy sprang up.

"She did not look dangerously mad," he whispered. "I must see her—speak to her."

He dered not call to her, and bring discovery upon him. He mest work quietly.

Marking the window at which the vision had appeared, he saw that one of the heavy branches of stall pine-tree swep; close against its bars.

He crept to the tree, climbing its trunk like a squirrel, and gaining the shelter of its densest branches. He was soon upon a level with the second story of the saylum.

A moment more, and he was clinging to the lowest bar of the window.

What a sight it was that met his gaze within!

A small, whitewashed cell, that might have belonged to a prison. An open grating in the door, and the sound of tootfalls in the corridor, told Eddy that supervision was exercised over the inmates by night as well as by day.

In the narrow cell a woman was kneeling at her prayer. The soft staright dritted in upon ber, he looked sai, but the fair, noble face had in it no token of an unthroned intellect.

"Perhaps she has quiet spells," thought Eddy, scarcely venturing to breathe. "Mr. Burgoyne said the Doctor said she was a "raying manie." How was I to attract her attention without alarming the sentine! in the hall?"

He moved upon the branch. The rustling aroused be kneeling woman, and she raised her head. The next moment her head drooped again lower than best of the support well as a supervision.

next moment her head drooped again lower than before.

Eddy, grasping the bar with one hand, softly tapped on the window ledge.

In an instant the he d was uplifted, with the eugerness of a startled deer.

Eddy serely raised his head within view.

"Mother i" he called softly—so softly that his vote migat have been taken for the marmar of the wind. "Mother! Hush! It is I—Eddy!"

The whispered words of Eddy penetrated to the hearing of the inmate of the lovely prison cell. She started to her feet, and looked wildly around.

"I must be going mad indeed!" she murmured, pressing her hands above mer heart, as if to still its throbbings.

pressing her hands above the problems.

Arain the boy's fingers tapped softly upon the lowest grating, and arain Eddy's voice called softly:

"Mother! It is really I—your own Eddy! Come to the window!"

A low cry broke from the lips of Mrs Burns. Then she pressed her face close against the rough iron bars.

A low cry broke from the lips of Mrs Burns. Then she pressed her face close against the rough fron bars.

The boy shrank back among the branches.

"Eddy! On, Eddy! Are you here?"

"I am here, mother!" he said. "Don't cry out, or some one will hear us."

He crept nearer to her, and pressed his face against the bars, his cheek touching hers.

She caught at Eddy's hand; she kissed his quivering lips again and again.

"O my brave boy!" she whispered. "I never expected to see you again."

"O on brave boy!" she whispered. "I never expected to see you again."

"Poor mother!" said Eddy, "You might have known! I would come to you if they had taken you to Misdagaccar!"
